Searching for accommodation - Tips

Temporary housing options:

- When you first arrive in Germany, you can contact your country's student associations in the city you're going to and ask if anyone can host you for a few nights.
- You can also consider renting a room on Airbnb or finding short-term rentals (Zwischenmiete). Note that these options may not allow you to register your residence (Anmeldung). If you choose Zwischenmiete, make sure to clarify the terms with the landlord.

Common types of accommodation for students:

- The most common type of accommodation for students in Germany is a single room (Einzelzimmer) in a Wohngemeinschaft (WG), which is a shared flat. In a WG, each tenant has a private room while sharing the kitchen and the bathroom. Some WGs may offer single rooms with private bathrooms. You can find WG listings online or consider renting an apartment with friends to form a WG. Student dormitories usually offer WG-style accommodations as well, along with other options like studio apartments or apartments for couples.

Challenging months for finding accommodation:

- The months of September, October, and November are particularly challenging for finding accommodation in Germany, especially in cities with a high student population. Many students start their studies during this period, and there is a high demand for WG-style housing.

When to start searching:

- If you haven't arrived in Germany yet, the chances of securing accommodation remotely are quite low. Renting in Germany often requires in-person visits and discussions with landlords or current tenants (common in WGs). It's advisable to prepare in advance.

Applying for waiting lists at student housing:

- Before arriving, you can apply to the waiting lists (Warteliste) of student dormitories without needing to prove your student status. Waiting times vary depending on the city, ranging from a few days to several months or even years.

I. Checklist after receiving your admission letter

Search for accommodation - Tips

Researching rental prices:

- Before you arrive, research rental prices in the city you're heading to. You can use websites like wg-gesucht, ebay kleinanzeigen, or immobilienscout to get an idea of the rental market.

Considering outskirts of the city:

- Living in the city center can be competitive. However, Germany's excellent public transportation network often extends to the outskirts. Use Google Maps to estimate commuting times from potential housing locations to the city center/university. Compare the prices of accommodations in different areas.

Writing a letter of interest (Anschreiben) for apartment viewings:

- Treat your apartment search like a job application. Write a letter of interest in German, similar to a cover letter. Introduce yourself, your studies, and your plans in Germany. Address specific requirements from the rental listing. Include your desired move-in date and contact information.

Viewing the apartment:

- Check nearby amenities such as public transportation, supermarkets, and pharmacies. Examine the condition of the walls and floors for cracks and document them. Test all utilities, windows, and doors. Inquire about the heating system and proper ventilation techniques to prevent mold.

Reviewing the rental contract:

- Thoroughly read and understand the rental contract. Pay attention to specifics such as the security deposit, termination conditions and responsibilities. Clarify any uncertainties with the landlord. → Attention: Documents will always be in German!

Seeking help if needed:

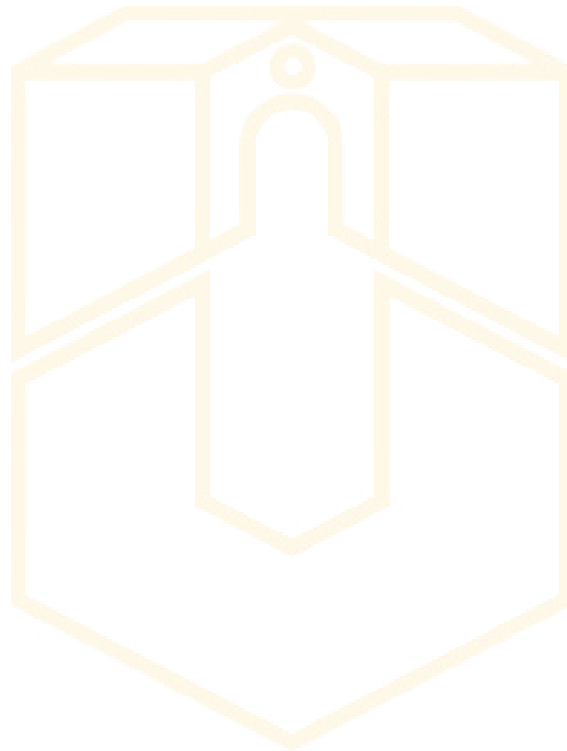

- If your search proves difficult, reach out to your university's AStA (student association) or International Office. AStA may provide temporary accommodations and information on housing resources.

Remember, finding accommodation in Germany requires patience and thorough research. Be proactive, prepared, and open to various housing options to increase your chances of success.

I. Checklist after receiving your admission letter

Search for accommodation - Scam Alert

- Please be aware of possible scams while searching for accommodation in Germany.
- Be cautious of any room rental offers where the owner is not currently residing in Germany. These are often scams and should be approached with caution.
- If you receive a response to an accommodation search posted on eBay or other sites and the landlord claims to arrange a viewing through TripAdvisor, Airbnb, or any other similar service, be aware that this is not a legitimate service offered by these companies.
- Before signing a contract, always insist on viewing the apartment either in person or through a video call. Do not pay any deposit beforehand.

II. Some practical information

Insurance

As a student in Germany you must have your public health insurance for enrollment. Without the confirmation of public health insurance, studies are not possible. The insurance company will submit this directly to the university.

→ Important for Exchange Students from the European Union: Students from EU countries, who are already insured in their home country, do not have to be insured in Germany. You can directly go to see the doctor with your European-Health-Insurance-Card (EHIC). Please send a copy of your valid EHIC to a public insurance provider.

You can check the insurance below to decide which one is most suitable for you.

Public Insurances:

- Only apply for students under 30 years old:
- AOK: www.aok.de/pk/
- TK: www.tk.de/en
- Barmer: www.barmer.de/en
- For a full overview, please check: gkv-spitzenverband.de

Private Insurances:

- Students who are older than 30: If you are not a member of the EU, you are not able to get into German Public-Insurance.
- For students above 30 years: After you buy the private insurance, you will need to send an email to a public insurance provider such as TK or AOK, requesting them to issue an exemption from mandatory health insurance and send a notification to the university regarding your exemption from German statutory health insurance.
- Note: If you choose private insurance, it's important to note that you will not be able to switch back to a public health insurance. While public insurance may be more expensive, it provides coverage for a wider range of medical services, including accidents and severe diseases. On the other hand, public insurances do not offer coverage for certain luxury services such as laser treatments, botox, fillers, and similar procedures.
